DOWN MITTEN

Designed for mountaineering in Alaska and the Himalayas, The North Face Nuptse Mitten is insulated with incredibly warm 600-fill down. A waterproof HyVent shell and water-resistant leather palm keep the down safe from moisture while you plod the last steps up to the summit. A warm brushed tricot lining inside the gloves keeps your hands feeling great when the temps drop low enough to make a snowman shiver. The Nuptse Mitten features a long gauntlet to cover your jacket's cuffs and a nose wipe patch at the side—'cause snot-cicles just aren't your best look.

Bottom Line: Mountaineering just got cozy all of a sudden—with your hands encased in fluffy down, you just may make one more lap up to the summit just for kicks.

PLASTIC BOOT

The SCARPA Phantom 8000 mountaineering boot is engineered for prolonged exposure to high altitudes and the harshest polar adventures. Waterproof, self-healing TIZIP zippers; anti-abrasion flank reinforcements; and thermo liners are just some of the many features built to protect and insulate just may make one more lap up to the summit just for kicks.

TRIPLE BOOT

The Scarpa Inverno Mountaineering Boot has been a staple of ice and alpine climbing for years and still remains the go-to choice for cold, multi-day ascents. From Alaska to the Andes to the Alps, countless climbers have trusted the bomber Pebax upper and Vibram sole to handle anything the mountain throws their way. Scarpa added a removable EVA insulated liner, which keeps your toes toasty in harsh cold and can be dried in your sleeping bag at night. It goes without saying that these double boots feature full step-in crampon compatibility.

OVER PANT | Gore-Tex®

The North Face Men's Mountain Pant handles the worst weather the mountains can dish out. Two-layer waterproof breathable Gore-Tex Performance fabric stands tough in the face of howling winds and driving snow. Full side zippers act as vents when you start sweating from a thousand vertical feet of knee-deep trail breaking, and removable suspenders help keep the pant secured on the descent from the summit. An attached elastic gaiter blocks spindrift from blowing up your legs, and The North Face included Kevlar kickpaches to keep your ski boots or crampons from shredding the cuffs.

Bottom Line: Get burly weather protection in and out of bounds with The North Face Mountain Pants.
